Really, he's Jolly well a top-sawyer when it comes to real adventure, you know-native princesses in the mahogany jungles of Yucatan, lakes of gold and all that sort of thing, you know. Almost at once his dark, mysterious frown attracted attention. less did his waxed mustache and 6 feet 2 of height. Here was a man who had lived. If you didn't believe it Mr. Murcay-Dunbar would sigh deeply and roll ous eyes about in approved fashion. He WAS a one, was Murray-Dunbar, but nobody could get a bally word from the chap till the ship docked to-day and the ship news bombardiers went aboard. IN SMART SCHOONER SEEKING wouldn't do that, you know, because, TN the midst of life we are in Lent. Yet how many of us in New York are giving a thought to the season of meditation and penance, save as the period wherein the price of eggs goes down and the thrifty housewife may be able to save the price of her Easter bonnet out of the housekeeping money? (I hope no stingy husband will take that too seriously.) Nobody in New York meditates, unless it's the Mayor. There seems to be a general opinion that thinking unaccompanied by other forms of activity is just another name for loafing; yet here we are right in the middle of a sentimental period. when we should be meditating upon sins-of course the sins of othersand urging them to repent their ways. Lent affords such an excellent opportunity to hold the mirror of meditation up to our neighbors that it is a wonder more of us do not stop to gaze within the Lenten Looking Glass and ponder upon what is reflected in it. If you have ever happened to observe two persons who were very much in love as they stood together before a mirror you must have noticed that by a supreme triumph of infatuation over vanity the man looked at the woman's reflection and the woman rested worshipping eyes upon the image of the man. Now, suppose we stand before the Lenten Looking Glass, the mirror of meditation and repentance, and, following the example of such love-struck creatures, yet keeping our wits about us, examine critically the aspect of each other.
